COACHING Camps are the latest and the most powerful way to learn, should organisations send their people on a group retreat to learn and play at the same time.

For many years, team building has been the only way to do this. Fun games of various "risk" degree are employed to test participants in various areas of leadership and self-development.

Now, Coaching Camps are quickly supplementing them using team building as a way to forge closeness amongst people and better themselves through self-development fun activities.

One such camps is now available on October 26-27, at Port Dickson, organised by the Malaysian Association of Certified Coaches or MACC.

BIGGER EVENT

Michael Heah said: "Into the fourth year now, this year's coaching camp is going to be bigger to cater to the increasing number of organisations who prefer this method of learning that leads to group and individual outcomes,

"The event is also appropriate for those considering coaching as a professional career, or something they like to do as an interest. They will gain first-hand knowledge of coaching to speed up their learning skills, without having to invest in a coaching programme," he added.

GOAL SETTING

In this overnight programme, each participant will be paired up with a personal coach for a relaxing 10 hours to set their goal, work out a detailed game plan, and seal their commitment to be in action. Not only this, there will also be mini learning sessions and fun activities to give their learning an extra boost.

COURSE FEE

Heah said: "For an all inclusive fee of RM700, this is one of the most investment-effective because the community of coaches is offering their services as a "community give back" to support everyone who wants to get better results and fulfillment in their lives,

"We are also out in unison to spread the "good news" and create more awareness of the powers of coaching," he added.

As seats are limited, it is advisable for those who are interested to sign up fast.
